CITY OF PARKS

City of Flint

Flint Parks History

The City of Flint has more than 1,800 acres of public green space. Flint offers a unique array of recreation areas due to the forethought and planning of individuals like John Nolen and J. Dallas Dort, also known as "Father of the Flint Park System".

In 1920, a planner and one of the authors of the City Plan for Flint, Michigan, John Nolen envisioned small parks and play lots within a five to eight minute walk (1/4 mile) of each residential area, supplemented by large city parks and connected by a series of park circuit drives creating continuous pleasant ways around the city.

The planning effort of Mr. Nolen was supported by J. Dallas Dort, a carriage maker and auto pioneer, who began the first organized work toward the building of the city's parks and boulevards and playgrounds in 1906. Mr. Dort's efforts included supporting formation of the Park Board in 1907, providing financial support, and the donation of land that served as the beginning of the City of Flint Parks. Because of Mr. Dort's efforts, the city formally honored him on February 14, 1927, shortly after his death, by adopting an ordinance, which would evermore refer to Flint parks system as the "J. Dallas Dort Memorial Park Systems."
